SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

U.S. Council of Economic Advisers during the Ford Administration, Part 5: Burton G. Malkiel Files, 1975–1977 brings together a large body of primary source material on the economic policy decisions and debates of the Ford administration during the period January 1975–December 1977. The documents are from the files of Council of Economic Advisers (CEA) member Burton G. Malkiel, an economics professor and chairman of the Princeton University economics department.

The collection consists of seventeen reels, organized alphabetically by topic covered or category of document, and includes a variety of document types, including confidential White House and Executive Branch memoranda, transcripts and summaries of meetings, transcripts of testimony before Congress, texts of speeches by CEA members, and documents from or about international agencies including the European Community, International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, International Energy Agency, International Monetary Fund, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, and Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. An interesting feature of the collection is the large number of handwritten notes and comments by Malkiel and other members of the CEA.

The collection includes material by or about prominent personalities including President Gerald R. Ford; President Ronald Reagan; CEA Chairman Alan Greenspan and CEA member Paul W. MacAvoy; CEA economists George von Furstenberg, Milton Russell, June O'Neill and Philip K. Verleger; and White House officials Barry R. Chiswick and William F. Gorog.

This collection is the fourth in a six-part series presenting material on the CEA during the Ford administration. Parts 1 and 2 presented the files of council chairman Alan Greenspan, and Part 3 contained the files of council member Gary L. Seevers. Part 4 presents the files of CEA members William J. Fellner and Paul W. MacAvoy for the period of 1973–1976, and Part 6 contains the files of CEA staff economists for the period 1973–1977.

During the late 1970's the United States economy was fragile. Stagflation, a combination of uncontrollable inflation and economic stagnation, challenged the Nixon and Ford administrations. Following President Richard M. Nixon's imposition of wage and price controls in the early years of the decade and the 1973 oil crisis, the U.S. economy plunged into a significant recession during 1973–1975. This collection begins in 1975, the first year of increasing economic activity and the beginning of the economic recovery. The CEA played a central role in this recovery and the documents in this collection provide insight into the analysis, recommendations, and policy decisions that guided the Ford administration.

During Malkiel's tenure with the CEA, unemployment was a significant policy problem. The unemployment rate in 1974 was the lowest in the decade, hovering around five percent. Starting in 1975, the unemployment rate began to rise, reaching a high of over nine percent. This rapid rise required a significant policy response from the Ford administration. Malkiel documents multiple possible responses to unemployment, including legislative remedies and public service employment schemes. In all of these discussions, Malkiel and the CEA carefully balanced the need to increase employment with the fear of sparking another round of inflation.

Though this collection contains a variety of documents, Malkiel was highly involved in the statistical work of the CEA. To that end, statistical data, and the discussion and analysis of this data, composes a significant portion of the documents in this collection. Malkiel worked closely with Ford's Economic Policy Board, specifically with the Subcommittee on Economic Statistics. Malkiel also worked on the CEA analysis and responses to the OECD reviews of the U.S. economy, a statistical work.

The LexisNexis collection U.S. Council of Economic Advisors During the Ford Administration, Part 5: Burton G. Malkiel Files, 1975–1977 brings together a large body of primary source material on the economic policy decisions and debates of the Ford administration during the period January 1975–December 1977. The documents are from the files of Council of Economic Advisers (CEA) member Burton G. Malkiel, an economics professor and chairman of the Princeton University economics department.

The collection consists of seventeen reels, organized alphabetically by topic covered or category of document, and includes a variety of document types, including confidential White House and Executive Branch memoranda, transcripts and summaries of meetings, transcripts of testimony before Congress, texts of speeches by CEA members, and documents from or about international agencies including the European Community, International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, International Energy Agency, International Monetary Fund, the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, and Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. An interesting feature of the collection is the large number of handwritten notes and comments by Malkiel and other members of the CEA.

During Malkiel's tenure with the CEA, unemployment was a significant policy problem. The unemployment rate in 1974 was the lowest in the decade, hovering around five percent. Starting in 1975, the unemployment rate began to rise, reaching a high of over nine percent. This rapid rise required a significant policy response from the Ford administration. Malkiel documents multiple possible responses to unemployment, including legislative remedies and public service employment schemes. In all of these discussions, Malkiel and the CEA carefully balanced the need to increase employment with the fear of sparking another round of inflation.
